The alarm was quickly spread and the Ponemah mill's fire department responded. Assistance was asked from the Norwich fire department and at 9.53 o'clock Fire Chief Howard L, Stanton sent the auto chemical company in resent the auto chemical company in re-sponse to the call. The three horses on the engine had a hard pull, but they made excellent time and the engine was on the scene and at work a few minutes before 11 o'clock. A few minutes after the fire broke out the Lincoln club was a veritable furnace and the flames had caught the big block in the lane owned by Mrs. John Anderson. This was soon a mass of flames and within a short time all the walls had collapsed and the roof had fallen in. From here the flames jumped to Dion's barn and to Graham's building, which were both totally destroyed. The horses and wagons in the barn were gotten out safely, but two tons of hay in the loft were consumed.

He how-ever saved his automobile and his wagons. Mr. Mercier's loss is very heavy as his entire stock of liquors was destroyed. He stated that he had $1,500 in cash locked in his desk in the saloon, but was unable to reach the desk owing to the intense heat and the rapidity with which the flames pread.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS

AT ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH Heard Impressive Sermon by Rev. Dr. Pace of Catholic University, Wash-

the Lincoln club, lost his store and entire stock.

From the rear of the burning buildings on Merchants' avenue the fire spread to the small building just north of Marsan's grocery, owned by J. C. Marsan and occupied as a millinery store by Miss Amanda Belair. This building burned down within haif an hour, leaving only a mass of smoking ruins. The block owned by J. C. Marsan was the next building to go. This seemed to catch on all sides at once and was soon reduced to a pile of ruins. The major part of the ground floor was used by Mr. Marsan as a grocery store and the remaining section as a shoe and clothing store by Edouard Adams. On the upper floors were tenements occupied by Mr. Marsan and family and by Mr. Adams. The barn in the rear of this building was In preparation for receiving the fourth degree, a number of Knights of Columbus from eastern Connecticut towns arrived in Norwich Sunday morning, and, following the custom of morning, and, following the custom of the knights before any formal session or ceremonial, attended mass. Escorted by local fourth degree knights, the visitors marched from the headquarters of White Cross council, K. of C., in the Sunlight building, to St. Patrick's church, the line being led by John M. Lee, master of the fourth degree for this district, His Honor Mayor Timothy C. Murphy Charles O. Murphy barn in the rear of this building was also claimed by the raging flames. South of Mr. Marsan's building was the Pion block, and this also was soon in flames. At midnight only a section of the south wall remained standing, and to all appearances this was doomed. The store on the ground floor was occupied by Mr. Pion as a hardware establishment, and he resided upstairs. This, like the Marsan building, was three stories high, and in addition to the tenement occupied by Mr. Pion and family, there were tenements occupied by two French families. Timothy C. Low water pressure greatly handicapped the firemen who rendered very efficient service in spite of the tremendous start the fiames got. The heat was terrific and the flames shot up into the air for over a distance of 100 feet at times while the reflection could be seen from as far away as Mohegan on the Montville trolley line and could be seen also for a distance of several miles on neighboring hills. Catholic university, Washington. This was a particularly happy and graceful compliment to the knights, since Dr. Pace is one of the most distinguished dignitaries of the American hierarchy, and his sermon and presence served to add significance to the events of the day.

The Apostles' Commission, Dr. Pace read the regular gospel for Trinity Sunday, Matt. xxvii. 18-29, Christ's commission to His apostles: Go ye therefore, teach all nations; teaching them to observe all things mobiles visited the scene during the whatsoever I have taught you; and be hold. I am with you all days, even to taught the consummation of the world. Earnest seekers after truth, said the preacher, often marvel at the firmness of Catholics' belief in their church and its teachings. Credo, they say: I be lieve, and they evidence a sureness, a stability of faith which is explained in rations ways by those who are of other faiths, or of no faith.

When Christ gave His commission to the apostles, humble, unlearned fishermen most of them, in an obscure corner of the powerful Roman domain, well with no compelling credentials, no worldly influence, confronted by the most gigantic task which any body of

to continue with their successors. for a few years or centuries, but till the consummation of the world. They did not faint or fail, for the eason that they were strengthened by the concluding promise of the commis sion: I am with you till the end of the world. The preacher said so many persons had the undefined impression that the Saviour is back in the past, two thousand years, with Augustus and others who were His contemporaries, instead of realizing that He meant this promise—with you, till the end of the world. While there shall be one last men with salvation to gain; Behold, I am with you all days! Christ Their Authority.

This, then, is why Catholics are so grounded in their belief. Apart from the fact that theirs is the oldest church among the Christian churches, that it with a good on the course of the church among the church that it numbers more souls than does any other such church, they have the firm belief that this charter of their firm belief that this charter of their earthly organization was given by One who had but just declared, All power is given to Me in heaven and on earth. Christ is their authority: He has been the strength of His apostles and their successors who have carried out His command, teaching all nations. They have not taught what was fashionable at the moment, not what it pleased the great and the powerful to hear, not those things which men were willing to believe, doubting other things, but "Those things which I have taught you!"

Catholics know that Christ has kep Catholics know that Christ has kept His word, that He is with His church personally, permanently, effectually; that, against opposition, trials from within and without, He has directed the successors of the little band which He had taught for three years to guide that church aright. That they have this firmly grounded belief, the preaches reminded his hearers is not ils firmly grounded belief, the reacher reminded his hearers, is not ecause they are better than others, goodness and grace, a fact which should be to them the inspiration to sincerest gratitude, to a desire to re-pay such great debt with prayers of deepest thanksgiving.

Faith Through Present Unrest. At the present state of the world, certainty, when there is so much that is unstable and civilization itself seems almost in peril, there are those who will rise to say that Christianity has been a failure: that the doctrines taught by Christ, the Saviour, the Per-fect Man, the Prince of Peace, the Son of the present outlook, however gloomy the forecast for even six months from now, the Catholic's faith tells him that Saviour who gave His pledge of unwavering strength and support and presence to the apostles will not fall now. That, though nations and peoples, and all that is beautiful and his toric and a product of worldcraft and man's ingenuity be swept away, the same Christ who commissioned the apostles will safely guide and direct His church, not alone through present perils, but "even to the consummatio of the world!" Dr. Pace's words made a profound impression on his hearers, as point af-ter point was unfolded with supreme ogic, convincing reasoning, beauty imagery and such a mastery of lan-guage as was to be expected from one of his scholarship.
